
Contents

General Introduction	1
I Some cautions about our moral judgments	2
II Four easy reasons to ignore world poverty	7
III Sophisticated defenses of our acquiescence in world poverty	13
IV Does our new global economic order really not harm the poor?	18
V Responsibilities and reforms	26
1 Human Flourishing and Universal Justice	33
1.0 Introduction	33
1.1 Social justice	37
1.2 Paternalism	40
1.3 Justice in first approximation	43
1.4 Essential refinements	45
1.5 Human rights	50
1.6 Specification of human rights and responsibilities for their realization	54
1.7 Conclusion	56
2 How Should Human Rights be Conceived?	58
2.0 Introduction	58
2.1 From natural law to rights	60
2.2 From natural rights to human rights	62
2.3 Official disrespect	65

2.4	The libertarian critique of social and economic rights	70
2.5	The critique of social and economic rights as “manifesto rights”	73
2.6	Disputes about kinds of human rights	75
3	Loopholes in Moralities	77
3.0	Introduction	77
3.1	Types of incentives	79
3.2	Loopholes	81
3.3	Social arrangements	82
3.4	Case 1: the converted apartment building	83
3.5	Case 2: the homelands policy of white South Africa	86
3.6	An objection	88
3.7	Strengthening	89
3.8	Fictional histories	91
3.9	Puzzles of equivalence	93
3.10	Conclusion	95
4	Moral Universalism and Global Economic Justice	97
4.0	Introduction	97
4.1	Moral universalism	98
4.2	Our moral assessments of national and global economic orders	100
4.3	Some factual background about the global economic order	102
4.4	Conceptions of national and global economic justice contrasted	106
4.5	Moral universalism and David Miller’s contextualism	108
4.6	Contextualist moral universalism and John Rawls’s moral conception	110
4.7	Rationalizing divergent moral assessments through a double standard	114
4.8	Rationalizing divergent moral assessments without a double standard	116
4.9	The causal role of global institutions in the persistence of severe poverty	118
4.10	Conclusion	122
5	The Bounds of Nationalism	124
5.0	Introduction	124
5.1	Common nationalism: priority for the interests of compatriots	126

5.2	Lofty nationalism: the justice-for-compatriots priority	135
5.3	Explanatory nationalism: the deep significance of national borders	145
5.4	Conclusion	150
6	Achieving Democracy	152
6.0	Introduction	152
6.1	The structure of the problem faced by fledgling democracies	154
6.2	Reducing the expected rewards of coups d'état	158
6.3	Undermining the borrowing privilege of authoritarian predators	159
6.4	Undermining the resource privilege of authoritarian predators	168
6.5	Conclusion	173
7	Cosmopolitanism and Sovereignty	174
7.0	Introduction	174
7.1	Institutional cosmopolitanism based on human rights	175
7.2	The idea of state sovereignty	183
7.3	Some main reasons for a vertical dispersal of sovereignty	187
7.4	The shaping and reshaping of political units	196
7.5	Conclusion	201
8	Eradicating Systemic Poverty: Brief for a Global Resources Dividend	202
8.0	Introduction	202
8.1	Radical inequality and our responsibility	203
8.2	Three grounds of injustice	205
8.3	A moderate proposal	210
8.4	The moral argument for the proposed reform	214
8.5	Is the reform proposal realistic?	216
8.6	Conclusion	220
9	Pharmaceutical Innovation: Must We Exclude the Poor?	222
9.0	Introduction	222
9.1	The TRIPS Agreement and its aftermath	224
9.2	The argument from beneficial consequences	230
9.3	Toward a better way of stimulating research and development of essential medicines	236

9.4	Differential pricing	238
9.5	The public-good strategy for extending access to essential medicines	240
9.6	A full-pull plan for the provision of pharmaceuticals	244
9.7	Specifying and implementing the basic full-pull idea	253
9.8	Justifying the plan to affluent citizens and their representatives	256
	Last Words	262
	Notes	265
	Bibliography	314
	Index	328